Tobacco Trade-Quarantine-Personal Notes and Briefs. ndence of the Richmond Dispatch. Nerfolk, September 9, 1887.

A few nights ago an old negro man named Aaron Goode, living near Mar-garettsville, in Northampton county, N. C., had his house set on fire and in going out to extinguish the flames was set upon and shot by a party of un-known negroes in ambush near by. His body was riddled with buckshot and he will die. Goode was in a fight with negrees at church earlier in the night. The Government telegraph line be tween Norfolk and Cape Hatteras, destroyed by the August storm, has been rebuilt and communication was opened last night. The fact was ascertained that the damage done at Hatteras and vicinity by the storm will amount to more than $10,000.

The immense shipments of tobacco from the port just now look as if the tobacco trade of fifty years ago was returning to Norfolk. Every ship leaving for Europe takes out tobacco, in rge quantities sent here from the interior.
